The Perfect Set

HOSTED BY LACHLAN PATTERSON

The Perfect Set

is what Michael Scott would watch after a long day at Dunder Mifflin. It’s a travel adventure show that revels in the seriousness of not taking life too seriously. Imagine the intrepid spirit of "Parts Unknown" colliding with the zany antics of “Between Two Ferns”, all while cruising at the laid-back pace of "Comedians in Cars Getting Coffee."

Guided by the wit of internationally known comedian and locally recognized surfer Lachlan Patterson, each episode unfolds against the canvas of a kitschy surf locale. But this isn't just about catching waves - Lachlan, alongside each episode’s special guest, drops into the heart of the local culture, embracing the “vaya con dios” ethos and letting go of one’s inner “kook”.

During this quest for perfect sets and a more perfect self, audiences can expect the unexpected. The journey is punctuated with spontaneous detours and delightful absurdities, as the show playfully meanders between the profound and the pointless, all while celebrating the beauty of life near the water and the mutual connection between surfing and comedy.

The Perfect Set pays homage to a mythical experience. According to legend, it reveals itself to only those who possess a sixth, or perhaps even a seventh sense. To perform the perfect set, if it really does exist, would require undying patience, immaculate timing, heroic bravery, and expert tradecraft rarely bestowed on the humans of this world. In comedy, it's that audience on that night, unknowingly setting up a joke that leads to another joke and then another. In surfing it's planetary alignment, the earth's distance from the moon, a kookless lineup, offshore winds, and the rhythmic undulating bosom of peaky waves.

In both surfing and comedy, technique is everything. Filling your quiver with boards or jokes demands years of falling on your face. Whether you're plunged into a sea of laughter or a salt water washing machine, it's only by returning to the line up that a devoted follower of these daunting disciplines hones their mercurial craft.

To be a surfer or a comedian, one must possess a keen sense of timing and rhythm, the ability to read the room (or wave), understand one's place in the lineup, take risks, and have a unique style of expression. And whether dealing with "kooks" or "hecklers," both pursuits attract their own brand of wannabes who will never truly grasp the essence of the craft.

FORMAT:

Each episode, drawing inspiration from the explorative adventure of Parts Unknown, showcases host Lachlan Patterson and a distinct guest comedian duck-diving deep into the rich culture of an iconic surf break and its neighboring town. They immerse themselves in local experiences—eating, drinking, and mingling with the people, aiming to earn their respect and uncover the unique allure of the surf spot.

Venturing beyond the break, the real conversation unfolds in the vast expanse of the ocean. Fueled by the day's adventures and the adrenaline rush of the waves, the setting becomes reminiscent of Hot Ones, where guests, pushed out of their comfort zones, offer raw, unfiltered responses, genuine emotions, and reveal their true comedy genius.

Concluding the episode onshore, after shedding their wetsuits, Lachlan bids farewell to the guest, hopping back into the van, continuing on the journey to the next captivating destination.

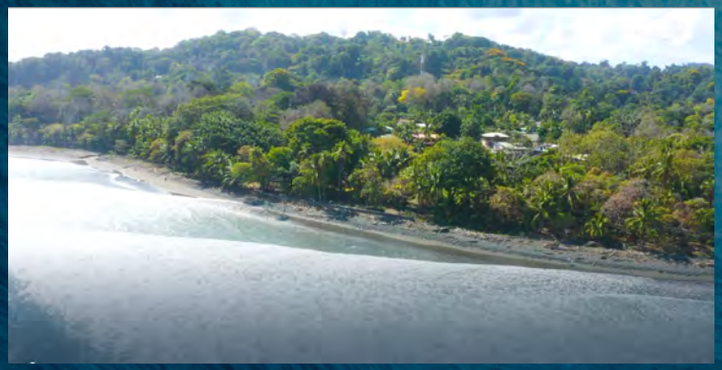

Born in Vancouver, BC, residing in Ventura CA, and traveling internationally to perform stand up comedy, Lachlan has a unique perspective on the world.

His signature brand of clean & dry comedy lampoons dad life, laments the new old people, and lives rent free in your head long after you hear his punchlines.

Also an avid surfer, he is the perfect host for this adventure comedy format.

Mood & Style

Episode Forecast

From coast to coast, beat by beat, we see beneath the surface of what makes these places, and the people who live there, sought after and special.

The Perfect Set

© COMMAND LINE 2023

